“I feel God has given me His eyes to see my community, and if you look at things that way, you see beauty and you see hope. I want to love people who other people find hard to love. The homeless person who’s living in a park and the prostitute who’s selling her body and the inner-city kid who doesn’t think there’s hope—all the people others are running from are the people I want to run toward,” Colleen says. “I want to love them the way Jesus loves me. I don’t think they understand how to be loved like that. I want them to see that they can be loved constantly. God loves me without boundaries, and people deserve that kind of love,”

While in Baltimore, our team joins Colleen in this mission to love those who feel unloveable and hurt. The opportunity to share the love of Jesus with Captivate East is humbling and challenging, yet the hope is abounding in the difficulties. We invite you to join us and pray for...
